THE Insane Asylum Investigators are at home, but their work is yet far from completion. The records of their transactions will make several hundred pages of manuscript. The verdict cannot be yet announced. The "spirits" were badly given away at the Academy of Music last night. The audience was not as large as the merits or interest of the performance would justify the management in expecting, but those who were present were pretty well pleased. The place they occupied in the Works is now vacant, but the battery that was constracted for it at Sweeney's last September will be ready in about three weeks for active service. The north battery is in a fair condition, but at present the only steam to run the two old pumps must come from these boilers. The battery by itself cannot supply this steam, but a connection has been made from its steam dram to the steam pipe leading from the new boiler bouse across the road to the Worthington pump, and the old battery thus acts as a steam drum in itself.

Connections are being made by Sweeney so that the steam from the new house will pass direct to the two old pumps as well as to the Worthington pump. These connections, bythe-way, should be hurried up.

Opposite the Works is the new boiler house, and a very complete one it is. Both the north and south battery of four boilers each are in position. The south one has been used for two weeks, but was cold yesterday in order to clean out to-day, while the north one was fired up Saturday. Both burned considerable coal at first, but as they dry out and the chimney becomes lined with soot they improve very perceptibly and are giving
